LEE-AT MEYEROV ARTIST STATEMENT AND BIOGRAPHY

I am a South African multidisciplinary, installation artist, living and working in Johannesburg. My practice explores materiality, transformation and the politics of labour through a feminist framework. I work primarily with found readymade objects and materials, such as masking tape, paper, matchsticks and teabags, which through a process of accumulation and labour-intensive layering, stitching and burning are transformed into large scale sculptural pieces and immersive installations. These materials hold symbolic significance to me as they are heavily tied to the domestic, the home and to traditionally feminized spaces and rituals.

Central to my work is the use of masking tape as a reimagined sculptural medium- what begins as a substance, used to bind, protect and discard, here, becomes inscribed with a new identity and physicality. Through my sculptures and installations, I aim to transform the gallery into a contemplative space, inviting a visceral encounter within the viewer, where labour and repetition become visible, where bodily and material boundaries blur, and where the 'discarded' and unseen becomes a symbolic site of meaning and pleasure.

Lee-At Meyerov was born in Johannesburg (1977), she is multidisciplinary artist renowned for her ability to fashion evocative installations and sculptures using broken, discarded and ready-made materials. Meyerov's background in fashion design and extensive experience studying and living abroad have greatly influenced her work. A recurring theme in her art is the body as both a presence and an absence.

In 2007, Meyerov earned a BA Fine Art and a MA Fine Art from the University of the Witwatersrand. Since then, she has participated in numerous group shows and art fairs, including the KKNK in Oudtshoorn, Aardklop Arts Festival, SculptX and Latitudes Art Fair. Meyerov was also a finalist in the ABSA l'Atelier Competition and was selected as a final exhibitor for "Sasol New Signatures". Her works are included in prestigious collections such as the SASOL and ABSA collections, as well as other private collections.

Curatorial projects include the video programme Too Close for Comfort: Belonging and Displacement in the work of South African video artists, screened at the Berlin Film Festival in Berlin and the Goethe Institute in Johannesburg.

Meyerov has had two solo exhibitions and, since 2022, her work has been exhibited in various group shows at Berman Contemporary. She has been exhibited at Paper Positions Berlin (2025), Art Cologne in Germany (2023, 2024), Investec Cape Town Art Fair (2024), The Klein Karoo Nasionale Kunstfees (2009) and Aardklop Arts Festival (2008).

Lee-At Meyerov is represented by Berman Contemporary.

THE SPACE BETWEEN | 2025

In this new body of work my masking tape sculptures take on a more defined, three-dimensional form. Paper, here functions as both subject and medium- transformed through the process of cutting, sticking and burning from a humble, everyday material into visceral, corporeal like sculptures.

Paper, often overlooked, is embedded with deep symbolic significance – it holds our personal and collective histories, memories, fears and desires and is inextricably bound to the body and notions of identity. Through fire and the act of burning, the work reveals what lies beneath the surface layer – the textures, stickiness, trauma and change, all point to the ephemerality of material and memory, while the varnish seals and captures what time would otherwise erase.

This series forms a foundational part of a larger, evolving installation, exploring the relationship between material, memory and the body as a site of trauma and resistance

ALL IS ONE | 2025

This work was born out of my own personal meditation and interest in the interstice between the body, our lived experiences, and the spiritual world. The concept of the interconnectedness of all beings, is one steeped in many religions and philosophies. This thinking suggests that our identities, stories and histories are all inextricably intertwined to each other and to nature. The making of this work was a fragile, time consuming, cathartic process, which physically challenged but also enabled deep introspection and reflection.

DECONSTRUCTED INSTALLATION | 2025

This work has been a dynamic, fluid and performative piece, undergoing various transformations both physically and conceptually. It began as an interactive installation comprising of 3 large scale masking tape sculptures suspended from the ceiling, each one hanging from metal, butcher hooks. These visceral, ambiguous like sculptures, when suspended and installed together took on a life of their own, moving and interacting with both viewer and environment within the gallery space. They subsequently shifted into different shapes and configurations, offering new layers of meaning to the changing narrative of the space. The Deconstructed Series continues this ongoing dialogue and highlights the inextricable link between the body, space and time.

REMNANT | 2024

This series is a collection of three-dimensional artworks that capture the memory and ephemerality of a previously existing installation. These works serve as a sort of 'material' palimpsest, which is a term used to describe a manuscript that has been written on and erased multiple times, with the remaining text still visible on the surface. The sculptures in the "Remnant" series undergo a similar process of inscription, re-inscription, and reshaping over time, creating a new narrative that is built upon the memories and experiences of the past.

One interesting aspect of the "Remnant" series is the idea of revisiting old works and recreating them in a new form. By creating these sculptures, I am able to breathe new life into a previously existing installation, transforming it into something new. Overall, the "Remnant" series is an exploration of memory and transformation, which reshape experiences over time. Through a combination of chance, creativity, and a certain willingness, I have reshaped these works into something new.

FALLEN NARRATIVES | 2023

This series was created at a very vulnerable time of my life. It represents trauma, brokenness and the fragility of life and how we subsequently heal and mend. In this series, healing and mending takes place metaphorically through the stitching, glueing and burning of the masking tape - this meditative, labour-intensive process is my own personal and reflective ritual. It allows me to find my own sense of belonging and healing in both the internal and external world. The concept of healing through mending is one which I am currently working with and wish to develop further into a larger body of work.

ENTANGLEMENT THROUGH SPACE AND TIME | 2022 - 2024

For this body of work, the fragile tapestry-like forms of my previous works make way for larger, more sensual, life-sized sculptural pieces. Here, three large masking tape sculptures are suspended from the ceiling, hanging from metal butcher hooks. These sculptures hang together to form an installation. They should be hung in an organic fashion, at differing heights, at the viewer's eye level. The nature of the masking tape and the transparency of the works will enable them to be seen through one another. The viewer would then be encouraged to walk in and around the works, experiencing them on a sensory level. Also important is the interplay of the shadows on the walls and floor, furthering the notion of the body – with its presence, absence and transience.

These works are more visceral in nature, suggestive of flesh, skin or an organic structure. The fragility of the material is in stark contrast to the sharpness of the metal hooks on which they are hanging. These ambiguous bodies function as metaphors for the physical and symbolic violence inflicted upon the body. They speak of the inextricable link between the body, space and time.

AISTHANOMAI – I FEEL, I SENSE, I PERCEIVE | 2021

This artwork is a deeply personal piece created during a time of emotional intensity in my life. The title of the work, "Aisthanomai", is a word from the Greek language that refers to perceiving and understanding through the combination of bodily sensations and cognitive processes. The artwork is a living embodiment of my personal journey, capturing the intensity and complexity of my emotions in a tangible form.

The artwork itself is a life-size piece that can be hung like a tapestry, rolled up, or draped over a surface, providing a sense of versatility and adaptability in terms of display. The materials used in the creation of the artwork evoke images of natural elements such as animal skins, fossilized remains, and woven threads, creating a sense of timelessness and connection to the earth.

Despite the fragility suggested by its appearance, the artwork is surprisingly resilient, evoking a sense of strength and durability in the face of life's challenges. It is a visceral and dynamic piece that engages the viewer's senses and emotions, creating an immersive experience that is both powerful and unforgettable.

UNRAVELLED | 2020

This work, spanning more than five metres in length, was created during Covid for the 2020 Latitudes Online Art Fair. Working during the Covid pandemic was challenging. This work, I feel, reflects this. It is more loose and free, disrupting my previously more obsessively controlled workings of the material. The piece is flexible, malleable, and its structure dependant on where and how it is hung – no longer bound by the confines of a box, or even a gallery space.

Interestingly, during the pandemic, my specific brand of masking tape was no longer imported into the country, resulting in incredible anxiety for me. However, through relentless research, I came across a South African-based company which produces their own masking tape for manufacturing purposes. I have been using their product successfully since 2020.

ACCRESCEENCE SERIES | 2008

This work, made solely from masking tape, forms part of the "Accrescence" series. Here, I explore the theme of growth and transformation, through a cumulative, labour-intensive process, whereby the material itself physically metamorphizes from a utilitarian object into an ambiguous substance suggestive of an organic, 'live' structure. Accretion refers to the continuing growth and subsequent increase in size of a material through a process of external addition and fusion. Although beginning as a slow and gradual movement, quiet and controlled, there is nonetheless an underlying tension and danger which prevails, as this systematic and seemingly ordered structure threatens to erupt into an uncontrolled, constantly growing, chaotic mass. "Accrescence" attempts to capture and 'freeze' the moment of accretion, before the 'organism' spins out of control.

The "Accrescence" series consists of the first works born out of my experimentation with masking tape as a medium. These works formed part of an installation-based exhibition, comprising of four sculptures framed within thin Perspex boxes, each measuring around 1,5m in length, and suspended from the ceiling. The purpose was that each work was to be seen through the other, adding a multiplied visual layer, but at the same time also functioning as separate entities. Here, I wanted to explore the interplay between the ephemerality and fragility of memory and the physicality of the material. The works become traces of the familiar, inherently recognizable, yet somehow foreign.
